

A DESERVED MONUMENT.

The friends of the late Senator Hearst are discussing the proposition of erecting a monument to his memory.

It is a very easy thing for the solid friends of a millionaire to erect a costly monument, but such a tribute could, we think, come with better grace from another source.

It should come from the press writers and printers of San Francisco.

Before Mr. Hearst took hold of the Examiner, the price of newspaper work was very low on the Coast and the newspaper proprietors banded together to see how little they could induce newspaper writers to work for. It was their custom to displace experienced and trained men with cheap graduates of the various colleges of California, the sons of wealthy men who allowed them to work for an ostensible salary of $25 a week, the newspaper paying $5 and the proud parent the $20. This sort of business went on until only those who were content to work for almost nothing could hope to have a permanent position on a San Francisco paper.

Under the old regime the publishers take all the credit of whatever appeared in their journals.

Men drugged on the newspaper dens for years and were never known outside of the offices where they drew their weekly stipend. The publishers were shrewd enough to know that whenever they allowed their writers to acquire a reputation for any special class of work, it meant a demand for more pay. So they kept their editorial and reportorial writers in obscurity.

When Senator Hearst took charge of the Examiner all this was changed. His son who managed the paper increased the pay of writers fifty per cent and upward and there was also a raise of wages in the mechanical and typographical departments.

He also created a demand for artists for newspaper work and stopped at no price to secure the best.

It was then that newspaper writers began attaching their signatures to their articles. It resulted in better work as each contributor realized that he would get whatever praise or blame was attached to his effort.

Attaches of the Examiner are always certain of the full moral and financial backing of the paper. Mr. Hearst believes that everyone attached to his staff is as good as the President of the United States and a snub or insult to anybody, from the Managing Editor to the colored man who acts as card runner at the door, is resented by the Monarch immediately and anyone who tries to make a reporter take water when he is right, will find Mr. Hearst prepared to spend $50,000 in the courts before he will yield an inch.

This is the sort of a newspaper the late Senator Hearst told his son to run and he is carrying out his father's instructions to the letter.

Now the people to start a fund for a monument to Senator Hearst are the writers and printers of San Francisco.

He materially increased their capacity to earn wages, not only attaches of the Examiner but the newspaper fraternity generally in San Francisco.

A small contribution from each would result in a tribute to the dead that his friends and family might well be proud of.

A young man of Wisconsin, 22 years of age, became violently insane from smoking cigarettes. He was accustomed to smoking four boxes a day besides cigars. Five men were required to hold him.

The Monitron and Pike's Peak Railway Company has sent President Harrison an invitation to take a trip over the railroad to the top of Pike's Peak the highest point in the world reached by a railroad line.
